Dissertation

Subject Code: SOC182C621

Credit Units: 6

Course Description: This research project is a compulsory course. The course is meant to introduce students to sociological field research which is very essential in pursuing the discipline. This course will also help the students to juxtapose theory and the real-world situation in the domain of sociology. This will also enhance students' capabilities while entering into different professions. The students have to undertake this research project under the guidance of a faculty member allotted by the department. Initially they have to submit a research proposal on which they intend to carry out their study. After the submission of proposal, the students have to conduct fieldwork. After finishing the fieldwork, they have to write research report under the guidance of their supervisor. Before the final submission of dissertation, students have to present progress report on their work in a seminar. There will be a viva-voce examination involving an external expert and faculty members of the department.
